CABOT.

Commencement at Cabot Was a Great Success.

On the evening of June 24, a very pleasant and successful entertainment was given by the twenty students of the high school who closed their first year. The hall was filled with eager and attentive listeners, who pronounced it one of the best entertainments ever given of this kind. This is largely due to the efficient work of Principal Davidson. Supper, served up the fine grade graduates, and after a few well chosen remarks and good advice he introduced Rev. F. E. Currier, who also gave them a fine talk and awarded the diplomas to Esther Wells, Ruby Tebbetts, Daphne Craig, Carrie Bolton, Alton Livingston, Howard Lane, Paul Norris, Warren Walker, Russell Barrett, Merrill Barrett, Ivan Spencer. These well behaved and bright students of the high school this fall it is expected there will be 35 in both classes.

Notice.

Some misapprehension seems to have arisen as to whether the discount of 25c per month would apply to the six-party local residence telephone service listed at $1.75 per month. The same discount applies to this service that applies to the other classes of exchange service, viz., 25c per month if bills are paid on or before the 15th of the month, making a net rate of $1.50 per month for six-party line service, which was charged for ten-party service.

All unexpired contracts that were signed for the term of one or two years will be carried out by the company, under the same terms, rates and privileges that were in force when contracts were executed. The change in rates, etc., to go into effect after expiration of initial period of contracts.

EAST BARRE

Death and Funeral of Mrs. Elondus Hood, Respected Woman.

The funeral of Mrs. Elondus Hood of East Barre was held at 10 a. m. the Rev. Geo. W. Whitcher officiating. The house was filled with sorrowing friends and relatives, and the profession of beautiful flowers showed the love and respect with which the deceased was held. The burial was in the family lot at West Topham cemetery, by the side of the two little girls whom she buried many years ago. Mrs. Hood leaves to mourn her loss her husband, a son, John, and wife; three grandchildren, Ruth, Eugene and Harriet Hood; three sisters, Mrs. Clara Gale of Washington, Mrs. W. R. Gale and Mrs. O. N. Waterman of Barre; and two brothers, Charles Paine of Antonio, Col., and Scott Paine of Washington. Those from out of town who were present at the funeral were Mrs. Lane of Lowell, Mass.; Charles Paine and Miss Beulah Paine of Antonio, Col.; G. A. Tillotson, Miss Nellie Tillotson, Miss Hattie White and Miss Arvilla White of West Topham.

Mrs. Mary Paine Hood was born Feb. 12, 1845, the third in a family of eight children. She was married to Elondus Hood, Nov. 25, 1865, with whom she spent a happy married life. To them three children were born, Ada, Edna and John Hood. Ada at the age of three years and Edna of eleven months were buried the same day, Feb. 11, 1868. This was a crushing blow for Mrs. Hood and for many years she mourned her little ones. The remaining child, John, and his family, have always lived with his parents, until about nine years ago in West Topham and since at East Barre. Mrs. Hood, the greater part of her life, enjoyed good health, but for several years her friends could see that she was failing, though she did not admit the fact until within a short time of her death. About a week before, she was taken to the Mary Fletcher hospital, where it was found she had a cancer. She underwent an operation which seemed successful, but the shock was too great and Monday, June 28, the end came.

All those who ever knew Mrs. Hood knew the kind, cheerful, loving disposition, ever reluctant to speak ill; always ready to speak good of all; her ready help in time of trouble, her hearty welcome, her loving care, will be greatly missed. A life of labor, self sacrifice and devotion to duty, lived on earth, but surely a bright and happy one with dear ones gone before has begun above. The floral tributes at the funeral were as follows: bouquets of roses and ferns from the husband, the son and wife; pillow of carnations and ferns, Miss Lane and family; wreath of roses, Mrs. Arvilla H. Whitcher, wreath of roses and pansies, Miss Beulah Paine; roses from the grandchildren, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Wolcott; Mrs. and Mrs. Scott Paine; Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Carr and Fred Gale; carnations from Mr. and Mrs. O. N. Waterman; Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Gale; Mrs. Clara Gale; Mr. and Mrs. Horace White; Nellie Tillotson, George Tillotson, Mr. and Mrs. Taplin; Lichotrops and roses; Mrs. Clara Chamberlain; white poinsettias; Mrs. Hattie White; myrtle, Mr. and Mrs. Noyes; geraniums and ferns, Mr. and Mrs. Will Blanchard and Etta Blanchard; bouquets of mixed flowers from W. C. T. U., Miss Mamie White, Mr. and Mrs. Hayward.

The family and relatives desire to express their sincere thanks to all the neighbors and friends for their assistance, their loving words of sympathy, and their beautiful floral offerings, also to the choir for the singing.

The children of the intermediate room of our graded school deserve special praise for the number of flowers found and brought to school. The contest began May 1 and ended July 1. During this time two hundred and forty one flowers were brought and names learned. Several were brought that were not put on the list, as the names could not be found. Fanny Martin brought the largest number and Pearl Stone the second largest.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

The Whiteside-Strauss Co. at Barre Opera House All Next Week.

The Whiteside-Strauss Co., one of the strongest vaudeville organizations that will visit Barre this season, comes to the opera house all next week.

This company is a new one in this section, having received flattering criticism from both press and public in the cities visited. The plays are all new and are presented exclusively by this company for the first time at popular prices. They include several well known New York successes.

The stars, Messrs. Whiteside and Strauss are both young, clever and experienced actors, and the supporting company is said to be unusually competent and well balanced.

Several high class specialties headed by the mysterious Kirby who escapes from ropes, trunks, mail bags, paper bags, handcuffs, straight-jackets, etc. Mr. Joe Natus, late of Lew Dookstad, er's minstrels, thousands have heard him on the phonograph, Studevan and Trebor comedy duo, Johnson Sisters, who can sing and dance, Will H. Strauss the comedian, and Henry Knight, the man with a thousand songs.

Ladies' tickets will be issued for Monday evening's performance only.

THE POWER OF MUSIC

By ELSIE B. HARRISON.

[Copyright, 1906, by American Press Association.]

In the Teutonic race a love for music is mingled with a weird philosophy, and when united with romance together they are capable of producing marvelous effects on the human soul. Such effect has been produced not only on Germans, but on music lovers of every country by the opera of "Faust." It probably appeals to more people than any opera ever written, and, while other stories in music come and go, that of Faust, Marguerite and Mephistopheles remains.

But there are deeper effects produced on only a few by certain music to which the souls of the millions are not attuned, just as we can conceive of an ear so delicately constructed as to hear the grass grow.

Friedrich Nietzsche, an eminent German philosopher, has declared there is that in some music, most notably the works of Wagner and Tchaikovsky, that produces a baneful effect on the brain and nerves even to the extent of causing tragedy.

One evening three music lovers in Berlin were entertaining themselves by playing together snatches from the great composers. They were Carl Becker, Bertha, his wife, and Heinrich Twingler. Becker played the violin, his wife the piano and Twingler the violoncello. Becker bore on his face, in his eye, in his whole makeup, evidence that he was born to music; his wife was a fair haired, blue eyed woman of a gentle disposition, while Twingler, a devotee of science, looked as if he would be capable of any sacrifice in its cause.

"Let us have the Sixth Symphony," he said.

A pained look shot across the face of Mr. Becker. "No, no," he exclaimed; "not that one! I don't like it!" Twingler fixed his eyes upon her. There was a cold, deprecating look in them.

"And why don't you like it?" he asked.

"Carl is never the same after playing it. He is always so melancholy."

"Well, if your husband is not a man of sufficient vigor of will to resist the influence of a few harmonious strains we shall have to choose something else."

"We will play the Sixth Symphony," said Becker, getting out the music and putting it on the rack before him. The others placed their own parts in position. Becker tapped with his bow, and they began to play. Now and again Mrs. Becker glanced aside from her score at Twingler inquiringly. Had he anything to do with the effect produced on her husband when he played this symphony? No; Twingler was evidently absorbed in his own part.

Then the wife began to look anxiously at the husband. His violin seemed a human being, alternately sighing, smiling, moaning, laughing. The violinist's face, especially his eyes, the soul's window, expressed all these moods in turn, but always turning to melancholy. His wife was troubled.

Toward the end the sounds grew more and more painful till Becker's instrument finally gave what seemed to be the wall of a broken heart.

The violinist stopped, turned and looked at the others. His wife covered before his glance, which was that of a melancholy demon. Twingler coolly drew a covering over his violin, folded the sheet music before him, said good night to the other two and took his departure.

Becker went to his room. His wife, instead of undressing, sat in her own room adjoining her husband's listening. Twice she arose, put her hand on the knob of the door separating her from him as if to go in to soothe him, but each time her resolution failed her. She feared to exclaim further. Suddenly there came from his room a sharp report. With a shriek she threw open the door and saw her husband lying on the floor, the blood oozing from his temple. He never spoke again.

A few evenings later Heinrich Twingler stood before a meeting of a philosophical society of which he was a member to address his fellows.

"You are probably aware," he said, "that I have been studying the influence of sounds on the human brain. The fact that Tchaikovsky destroyed himself after composing his Sixth Symphony does not prove that his work led him to do so. It has been reported that several persons have died by their own hands after playing it, and, as you know, it is called the 'suicide symphony.' But I have never been able to get any confirmation of these reports. I therefore determined in the cause of science to sacrifice if necessary one of my personal friends.

After playing this symphony with him several times I concluded that if he continued to play it he would probably kill himself. A few evenings ago I induced him to play it with me and his wife, who, being aware of its effect on him, came very near defeating my purpose by objecting and during the rendering stopped short in her part. It was not necessary for me to interfere, for her husband was by this time so affected by Tchaikovsky's remarkable work that he dominated her, and she proceeded. I was deeply interested in the marvelous influence of the symphony over the subject, giving a power of expression that I have never been cognizant of in any one before. At midnight after the rendering he shot himself.

"I regret the sacrifice both to him and his wife, but in the fatherland we know no obstacle to the cause of science."

"Couldn't Afford It."
